LGBT Network
Facebook blocked many gay-themed ads of its new advertising policy, angering LGBT groups

By Eli Rosenbaum
October 3, 2018

The advertisements all seemed innocuous at a glance.

A ribald sendup of fairy tales hosted by a comedian in Los Angeles. A Spanish-language social group for Latinxs by a community center in Las Vegas. And a list of senior-friendly housing options distributed by a nonprofit.

But they were all blocked by Facebook. The company’s system, which uses automated and human monitors, determined that the advertisements were “political,” though they did not involve advocacy or any explicitly political views.

The common thread between them all? LGBT themes.

But as the rejections began to pile up, so did Kilmnick’s suspicions.

David Kilmnick, CEO of the LGBT Network, a Long Island-based nonprofit, said his organization has seen about 15 advertisements blocked as political since the spring or early summer, around the time that Facebook officially changed its policy. That was when the majority of the dozen or so organizations and people interviewed by The Post said that they began to experience issues with LGBT content.

“You’re completely targeted simply because we were LGBT,” he said, “for what we’re advertising — ads that promote our programs that help support the community and celebrate pride. There’s nothing political about that.”

The New York-based LGBT Network, a new advocacy platform.

President Donald Trump and Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh, who may end up deciding the fate of same-sex marriage, have both suggested they would like to see the definition of marriage narrowed in a way that would exclude same-sex couples. But the impact has been felt in other ways, too.

David Kilmnick said training is needed for probation officers, who are working to reduce violence; and better data collection to improve policies and practices.

“Expect to drop out of high school because of harassment,” Kilmnick said.

The county’s probation officers and county police will be trained on sensitivity and inclusion for all LGBT groups.

Suffolk Police Commissioner Geraldine Hart said the department will host forums this fall for LGBT officers and their families.

The county’s probation officers will receive training “focused on sensitivity and inclusion” for LGBT youth, said County Executive Steve Bellone.

“It’s going to be real hard to look in the mirror and see themselves as the only team in Major League Baseball that is not holding a Pride Night,” he told NBC News.

Suffolk County: Law enforcement partnering with LGBT Network

By Robert Brodsky

The training, he said, will provide probation staff with an opportunity to learn about LGBT policies and practices to reduce violence; and better data collection to improve the county’s 244 probation officers’ ability to provide warrants and support the administration of the Court of Probation in Suffolk.

School resource officers, members of the county police force located in Suffolk schools, will reach out to the more than 100 gay/straight alliance organizations in county schools to provide support for bullying and harassment issues.

“We are not going to tolerate bullying of any kind based upon who you are as a person,” Bellone said at a news conference Monday in Hauppauge. “It’s deplorable. We’ve seen this happen throughout our dark history, whether it was Hitler or other tyrants. The first step they take is try to erase a community.”

Kilmnick said training is needed for probation officers as the “school to prison pipeline” and distribution of anti-LGBT bullying and harassment information.

New York LGBT Network President and CEO David Kilmnick has said, “Bert and Ernie are icons of the LGBT community and this announcement warrants a long-overdue ‘Coming Out’ Party. These two characters are known throughout the world as children’s icons and will help parents discuss the LGBT community with their children at a young age, all the while allowing children to express themselves freely. LGBT Advocates everywhere see this as a terrific step in the right direction for inclusion everywhere, teaching kids that they may feel welcome and safe everywhere.”
